It's not easy being a teenager. Even outside of school, the pressure is on, and issues like self-esteem, body image, competition, and relationships add to the noise. This is why real friendships and trusted mentors are important, and the values and support of Jewish community can be a positive guiding force. And this is why Moving Traditions created Rosh Hodesh and Shevet.

Once a month, in small peer groups* with trained adult mentors, teens bond and have open conversations in a safe space.

Rosh Hodesh and Shevet both have a positive and lasting impact on teens, empowering them to become strong, confident, and happy young adults.

* Groups are designed to meet either online or in person.

Rosh Hodesh

“The bonds I forged with the other girls in Rosh Hodesh are the strongest I've experienced, and I feel free to be who I am.”

Moving Traditions Programs are part of the L.A. Jewish Teen Initiative, co-funded by the Jewish Federation of Greater Los Angeles and the Jim Joseph Foundation with seed funding provided by the Jewish Community Foundation of Los Angeles. Program partners include UpStart, Etzah, an Initiative of the AJU Graduate Center for Education, and BJE Impact.
